Old Frontiers in a New State: Cascading Frontierness and Border Events in Osh, a Marginal Oasis in Southern Central Asia

LI Ru-dong

(Shanghai Academy of Global Governance and Area Studies, Shanghai International Studies University, Shanghai, 201620)

Abstract

have been significantly associated with the shifting location, spatial compression and temporal layering of the socio-geographical-historical structure of the region in Central Asia. Cascading frontierness cannot only serve of contemporary Central Asian state-building, but also a general phenomenon in the transformation of states in the Eurasian continent. The examination of the frontierness may promote the integration of academic issues on frontier studies inside and outside China, as well as the comparative study regarding various types of regional social systems.
